TABLE OF CONTENTS

Preface

Acknowledgements

Abbreviations

Chapter I - Introduction

Chapter II - Effectuating Effectiveness in European Community Law
1. The 'Transformation of Europe' and a Prior Transformation in Public International Law
2. National Courts and 'National Procedural Autonomy'
   2.1 A strategy of minimum interference
   2.2 A growing concern over effectiveness
   2.2.1 Setting aside national 'remedies'
   2.2.2 Creating new remedies
   2.2.3 Creating new remedies and spelling out minimum conditions for their exercise
   2.3 A more balanced approach
   2.4 Critique and conclusion
3. State Liability for Judicial Wrongs - Basic Notions
   3.1 Extension to judicial acts - the problem
   3.2 Non-compliant courts
   3.3 Primary and secondary proceedings

Chapter III - Three Hypotheses on the Necessity of State Liability for Judicial Acts in the Community Legal Order
1. International Law Hypothesis I: State Liability As Refined 'State Responsibility' Tailored to the Individualising Nature of the Community Legal Order
   1.1 Community law refers to public international law

Hofstötter, Bernhard
Non-compliance of national courts : remedies in European Community law and beyond
1.2 Attribution of courts to the State in public international law
1.2.1 From the early days to the twentieth century
1.2.2 Contemporary practice
1.2.2.1 Separation of attribution from substantive issues
1.2.2.2 The LLC's Draft Articles on State Responsibility
1.2.2.3 Practice of international courts concerning the attribution of national courts to the State
1.2.2.4 Scholarly comment
1.2.3 Conclusion
1.3 Transferability to Community law?
1.4 Conclusion

2. International Law-Hypothesis II: The Imperatives of the Protection of Fundamental Rights Are Such As to Require State Liability for Judicial Acts
2.1 Procedural guarantees - Articles 6 and 13 of the ECHR
2.2 Substantive guarantees - Article 1 of Protocol No. 1
2.3 Conclusion

3. Comparative Law-Hypothesis: State Liability for Judicial Acts Is a General Principle Common to the Legal Traditions of the Member States
3.1 Alleging a general principle
3.2 Conclusion

4. Conclusion

Chapter IV - Reservations for Community Law
1. Grounds Causing Hesitation
1.1 Judicial independence
1.2 The doctrine of res judicata
1.3 Impartiality of the judiciary
1.4 Endangering the spirit of co-operation between the ECJ and national courts?
1.5 Litis finiri opportet or endless litigation within 'reasonable time' (Article 6 of the ECHR)?
1.6 The parallelism between State liability and the community's extra-contractual liability regime
1.7 Undesirable power gain for the ECJ?
2. Conclusion
Chapter V - Which Standard of Liability for Judicial Acts?

1. The Additional Standard of 'Manifest Infringement' of Community Law

2. Criteria to Be Taken into Account by National Courts
   2.1 Breach of the duty to refer pursuant to Article 234(3) of the EC Treaty
   2.2 Conclusion

3. The Application of the Standard of Manifest Infringement in Köhler

4. Need to Delimit the Judiciary from the Other State Functions
   4.1 What is a court for the purposes of State liability?
      4.1.1 Do only courts of last instance trigger State liability?
      4.1.2 What is a court of last instance for the purposes of State liability?
   4.2 Conclusion

5. Conclusion

Chapter VI - Necessary Institutional Arrangements in the Member States to Facilitate State Liability for Judicial Acts - A Case Study on Austria

1. Community Law Background

2. State Liability for Judicial Acts under Austrian law
   2.1 State liability pursuant to the law on official liability (Amtshaftungsgesetz - AHG)
   2.2 State liability pursuant to Article 137 of the Austrian Federal Constitutional Law
   2.3 Concluding assessment

Chapter VII - Alternative Remedies

1. Kühne & Heitz and an Approach of 'Try Again'?

2. The Action for Infringement
   2.1 Deficiencies
   2.2 Commission v. Italy
   2.3 Relationship between Köhler liability and the action for infringement

3. The Residuary Role of the ECtHR

4. Conclusion